HELLISH FIGHTING IN FLANDERS—BOTH SIDES CLAIM ADVANTAGE

London, Nov. 12.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Daily Mail sends the following:

"It is now admitted semi-officially but not yet mentioned in the official communications, that it was the failure of the German Crown Prince to hold his position in the center which compelled a retreat along the whole line.

While Gen. Von Hindenburg, on the left, and the Austrians on the right, were both maintaining their position, the Crown Prince's army was fleeing back to the fatherland.

"The Russians poured in between the wings thus left in danger and attacked them, each on two sides, forcing them to scramble back to the frontiers and losing terribly all the way.

"The excuse made in Germany of bad roads is ridiculed here since, in spite of the roads, the Russians accomplished marvels in marching. The Russians, unlike the Germans do not depend upon the resources of the country thru which they are traveling, but bring ample provisions with them.

"It appears that six German princes were killed in this battle, three of the Lippe Family and one each of the houses of Hesse, Waldeck and Reuss."

London, Nov. 12.—The wave of optimism which has been sweeping England for the past week has been checked by news of the occupation of Dixmude by German forces and the renewed indication of the peril from German submarines by the fate of the torpedo gunboat Niger which yesterday was destroyed by a torpedo launch from a submarine of the enemy.

This occurred within sight of the English shore in the narrow part of the Channel where several hundred ships lay at anchor.

FARMERS INSTITUTE AT GERMANTOWN

INTELLECTUAL EXPOSITION

Of Hawthorne's Masterpiece Was the Lecture By Rev. R. L. Benn

"A Shadowed Soul," the subject of a lecture delivered last night by the Rev. R. L. Benn at the church of which he is pastor, was selected as appropriate for an analytical review of what he considers the most wonderful of prose compositions on this side of the water, namely, Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter."

Aside from its value and beauty as a classic in English composition the great moral purpose with which it was written was developed in all its telling and artistic strength under the eloquence and earnestness of the speaker. The chance to picture, in all its bitter and blighting consequences, the unrelenting effects of sin was used to a full advantage, and with the magnetic power of combined gift and consecration he drew his hearers to the purest and most sublime ideals.

The application to modern times had scriptural basis and included the much agitated question, "Is divorce justifiable?"

The subject announced for the next lecture was "The Laughter of the Soul at Itself," suggested by Hugo's "Les Miserables," which will be the theme of discussion.

In the December Woman's Home Companion Juliet Wilber Tompkins, writing the first chapter of her new serial, "The Roving Foot," with illustrations by James Montgomery Flagg, says:

"You can't do anything well if you are trying to save something. If you are saving your hands, you don't do good housework; if you are saving your clothes, you don't have a good time; if you're saving yourself you don't put things through. You have to dedicate yourself—whole."
